Dressing up for dinner

Leesa Smith

WALKING into Tharen's Restaurant at Kings Cross is like entering your grandmother's old wardrobe.

You are spoilt for choice, with almost any hat imaginable adorning the walls along with wigs, feather boas, masks and other props.

It is inevitable on a theme night out that you will have a barrel of laughs, so when you are greeted by the staff dressed in character, the smile won't leave your face until the night comes to an end.

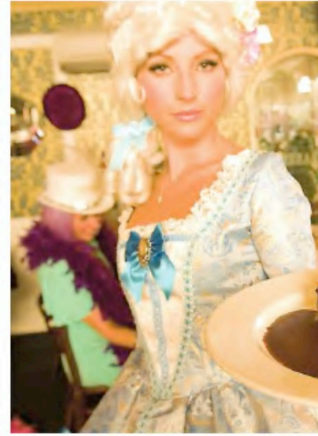

The light-hearted mood was infectious, with one of my more hesitant guests getting involved in the spirit of things in no time at all.

You have the option of the two party packages – one with a three-course dinner only ($59.50) and the other with drinks included ($93.50).

It was a no-brainer for us on a Friday night, so the drinks package it was.

Once everyone sat down after donning the most ridiculous hat they could find, we ordered from the option of six entrees, mains and desserts.

The twice-cooked four-cheese soufflé about his performance weeks later.

After mains were polished off, everyone was lured to the dance floor with the cheesiest yet fabulous '70s hits which kept you begging for more.

Constantly swapping our look with the quirky props throughout the night was also a novelty that never got boring.

I had a variety of guests with me from all walks of life including straight, gay, single and married friends – and everyone had an absolute ball.

It's definitely the kind of place that you can take a bunch of mates and be guaranteed an awesome night out.

Tharen's is the perfect package of great food, endless flowing drinks and all-round entertainment.

with tomato fondue was a mouth-watering hit, as were the South Australian black mussels in tomato bouillabaisse broth.

Coogee magician Liam Power kept us engrossed with his impressive tricks, to the point that my guests were still talking
